SHOCK AND AWE!

A shot in the dark

Photographer teams up with air ace Martin Sonka to nail this extremely dangerous sunset stunt

 Dan Voytech had an idea for a picture – lighting a plane as he would an object in motion in a studio, but at 200kmh. Enter Czech Air Force fighter pilot and Red Bull Air Race ace Martin Sonka and a whopping 30 strobe lights at Sonka's home airport in Stare Mesto, Czech Republic. There was just 15 metres between the lights, and his plane has a 9m wingspan, but disaster was averted... and Voytech came away with a sick photograph.

US military test out its search and rescue techniques

 TV has told us how this works: your plane/luxury ocean liner has sunk, you're clinging to a piece of wood and the sharks are circling you and adding seasoning. And then the US Navy arrives in the nick of time! Here sailors for Helicopter Sea Combat Squadron 26 (HSC-26 for short) winch from an MH-60S Seahawk helicopter to practice search and rescue operations somewhere in the Arabian Gulf.

Hurry up, this shrinkage is life-threatening!

arah, welcome back.
It's been a few months
since you were last in ZOO. What's been going on?

Heaps, actually! I just got back from America, where I did some shoots and went to the Playboy Midsummer Night's Dream Party at the Playboy Mansion. I was the first painted girl from the Southern Hemisphere!

What did that involve?

Walking around while only wearing bodypaint. It was definitely interesting! I'd been to the Mansion previously, but I'd never been one of the painted girls before. I was taking lots of photos with

"JUSTIN BIEBER
GRABBED MY BOOB,
SO I BACKHANDED HIM
ACROSS THE FACE!"

people and I got to meet heaps of celebrities...

You must've got some good stories out of that!

I met Justin Bieber. One of the other painted girls wanted a photo with him, but he was over it, and I tried to explain to her it wasn't personal. I said, "We're over getting pics taken, so imagine how he feels!" Justin must have heard me because he gave me a hug and a kiss on the cheek, but he also grabbed my boob, so I backhanded him across the face! It was memorable but probably not the best thing to do.

Do you know how many people have fantasised about whacking the Biebster in the face? Are you sure it wasn't an accidental boob grab?

There's no way you could say it was an accident. His security knew as soon as it happened and they just walked him out of the place.

Mansion celeb stories, but with a happy ending?

The coolest person I met was Khloe Kardashian. I don't like the Kardashians but she ended up being so cool. She's quite tall, and her arse is as massive as I thought it was going to be.

What would you compare her arse to?

Two giant mountains. It's very, very large!

What else have you been up to lately?

I've shot for Playboy — not Playboy US, but Playboy Venezuela and Slovenia. I've done my fourth Playmate shoot! Soon I'm going to Mexico to start a media tour. They print out a giant poster of my centrefold, and I get to stay at the Bunny House, which is a giant apartment in Mexico City. I'll have all to myself. I just sign magazines and talk on TV, but I don't speak much Spanish. They give you an interpreter, but it's awkward sitting there on live TV, twiddling your thumbs with a smile on your face. And in Mexico City, even if you just want a coffee, you have to call your bodyguard to get it safely. Last time I called up the bodyguard he got to the apartment and was like, "What's wrong? How can I help?" But I just wanted to get a selfie with his gun. He was not impressed! I'll have to be a little bit more professional...

Not too professional, we hope.

Never!

Last time we asked you to describe yourself on the drink and you said about wine:

"Getting my boobs out and dancing on tables until 6am."

Has that happened lately?

Well, it happened in a car going past police when I was in France, and didn't work out too well. That was at 1pm and escalated quickly... they just stared. I thought it was funny at the time: four topless Playmates in the car, screaming. Then we got stuck in traffic next to a police car for the next 20 minutes, which were the longest of my life. They stared and got out of the car. I thought we were going to get arrested, but we didn't actually get booked!

How have you coped with the fame after Breaking Bad?

Honestly, I like to float around and not be noticed, but I'm my own worst enemy the street, on social media... it's unrelenting. I even made an app [Yo, bitch] after someone suggested it. Sounds crazy but it's done inexplicably well!

What did you think of Better Call Saul?

I loved it! I think it was just what the fans needed. They want to see these characters and Saul was such an who went into that, kinda hesitant, wondering, "What's he going to be like?" But he's so misunderstood. He's a great guy to everybody and he's literally one of the funniest men I've ever met in my life.

We can't help but notice you've been promoting yourself for the Star Wars spin-offs pretty heavily. What's going on?

Oh, that! I have fun on Instagram and social media from time to time. I like to make fun and stir the pot a little. There's never any legitimacy in it... most of the time.

We're guessing you'd

Are you kidding? It's like Bond — in fact, they're better than Bond. You can't turn down a role like that.

Speaking of which, do you still welcome tour groups outside your house?

That was a big mistake. We're even thinking of moving now because we just get people who come and wait outside the house for me! I had to politely ask the bus company to stop and they were really cool about it.

Meet the kick-arse replacement for the Humvee

 After three decades, the replacement Hummer has been named by the US military: the Joint Light Tactical Vehicle (JLTV) will now be the go-to vehicle for Uncle Sam's forces... and once it's available to the public, probably rappers, too.

And there's big bucks for its manufacturer from the endless US military budget: $9.3bn for the first production run of 17,000 vehicles, and a possible $43bn over the decades it'll take to build the 54,600 slated for the Army and the Marines.

Why change the Hummer, of which 280,000 have been built over its 31 years of service? For one, the changing nature of the wars the US ends up fighting: less battlefield action and more patrolling districts where terrorists want to blow them up with IEDs.

"Our JLTV has been extensively tested and is proven to provide the ballistic protection of a light tank, the underbody protection of an MRAP-class vehicle and the off-road mobility of a Baja racer," said a company rep.

So what is the Army getting for $500,000 per vehicle? There are minimal specs around due to its military nature, but we do know it can ford 60 inches of salt water — double the Hummer — and has a turning radius of just 25 feet. And the brochure claims it'll travel 70 per cent faster than "today's gold standard" when off-road, as well as packing blast-protected seats and exterior.

TRAVELS 70 PER CENT FASTER!

What a sonic boom really looks like

These awesome pictures show the shock waves leading to a sonic boom — and sadly, the technology could help plane loads of Poms fly Down Under in just six hours.

NASA is using "schlieren imagery" to research how to reduce noise from supersonic aircraft, which might eventually result in new commercial flights replacing the scrapped Concorde.

The famously hook-nosed aircraft wasn't allowed to fly over land due to the unholy racket it made, one of the reasons it ate money like a fat person with an eating disorder at a free buffet.

Sonic booms caused by faster-than-sound movement isn't a pretty sight, as witnessed the last time the ZOO office saw a free bar at a party.

And now that could all change — ushering in a new era of hyper-fast travel ending the 24-hour slog to the UK where you watch four films, drink a bottle of wine and still wake up with eight hours left.

The technique resulting in such striking shots isn't new — it dates from 1864 — though being able to capture a supersonic plane in flight is. Until a recent breakthrough, it was used for model planes in wind tunnels.

To capture changes in air density at more than 1236kmh — the speed of sound — means one subsonic plane with cameras trained downwards had to fly above a supersonic test aircraft over the Mojave Desert.

Get your hands off my joystick, Goose!

Dirty cars never looked so good

ZOO pulls up a bit dusty as art geniuses give rides the Mad Max treatment

 Breaking news: ZOO has been pictured at a grime scene — and we're pleading guilty as charged!

The street artists at Sydney's Blackbook Ink worked detail from a recent ZOO cover into two dust-covered cars used to promote the launch of the new Mad Max video game, out now, based on the recent film.

That George Miller blockbuster included a giant dust storm, of course, so transforming Aussie wheels into works of art was the logical next step — and as far as pimping cars goes, it makes for a spectacular change from adding layers of paint.

ZOO's familiarity with dust art begins and ends with drawing a huge cock and balls on a neighbour or mate's car when it hasn't been washed for a few weeks.

These guys, however, are pros. They used a film-grade dust applicator to coat the cars at Sydney's Gasoline Motor Co, and then etched away, artistically, using a variety of methods to reveal words and pictures.

The result is the coolest dirty thing we've seen since Kim Kardashian's sex tape.

"This was definitely one of the most unusual projects we've ever been involved with," said Blackbook Ink's Brode Compton.

"It was quite a challenge ensuring we achieved the look we were hoping for but we're stoked with how they've turned out."

The artists have a varied pedigree behind them, with clients including Sony, Volkswagen, a Subway franchise and Auburn North Primary School in Sydney. And not a cock and balls in sight, we reckon.

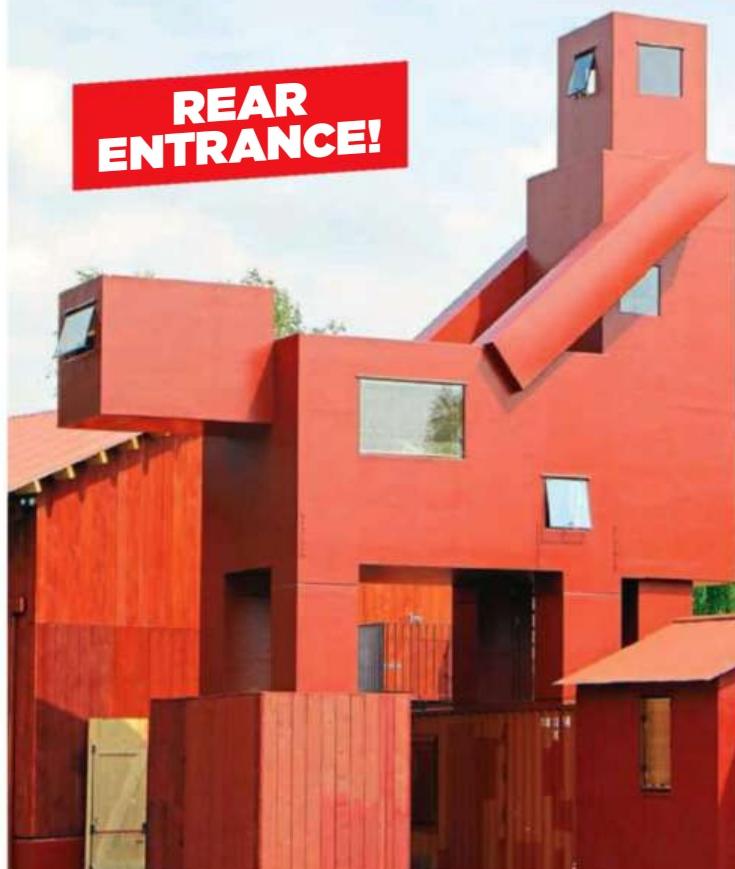

ZOO COVER GETS EVEN DIRTIER!

Knob the BUILDER!

Massive German erection looks like a Minecraft porno scene

» Critics have been divided by a new building that's just been constructed in Germany. Some say it looks like a couple doing it doggy-style, while others say it looks more like a bloke rooting a sheep.

Called the "Domestikator", it's a temporary installation for VIP guests at the country's annual Ruhrtreffen Festival. The firm that built it, Atelier Van Lieshout, says it's meant to explore society's domination of nature, which would explain why they modelled it on a Kiwi bloke enjoying his favourite pastime.

While some visitors to the festival have pissed themselves laughing when they first see it, others have accused it of promoting pornography... a very blocky, Minecraft-esque type of pornography.

However, despite the controversy, the firm is happy with the project, saying it has "gathered a lot of attention online". Yeah... on pornhub.com.

BMW's new 3.0 CSL Hommage R pays its respects to one of the schmickest race cars ever

There are clues all over showing this is a racer: the #25, referencing the original's 1975 enduro win at Sebring, race-spec seats and aero improvements to the front splitter. Oh, and the identical 1975 livery. But the real win's in the race suit and helmet — sleeve piping lights up when info travels to the helmet, which uses augmented reality to display line-of-sight data. Let's hope the helmet goes from concept to reality.

My eyes lit up and I thought, "I'm either still dreaming or this is going to be my lucky day!"

JACQUES the RIPPER

ZOO's stand-up comedian heckles life every week

ED SHEERAN'S CRIMES AGAINST MEN & MUSIC

I've never been a fan of sappy, weak-arse love songs and their pledges of undying bleh-be-bleh, so you can imagine how much Ed Sheeran chafes my sack. I can't go on any longer without calling him out on his bullshit. His schmaltzy ballads are catchy and he does have talent, but he's pushing women's romantic expectations well beyond the threshold of reality, and every time I hear him sing, "Darlin' I, will be loving you, 'til we're 70",

I go one step closer to stalking the streets of England and beating random gingers to death with a ukulele...

Ed's pretending to sing from the heart but he's not even in a committed relationship; he's in the back seat of his tour bus getting drenched in a daily wave of young groupie vageen. He's a 24-year-old ranga trying to push this "I'll be loving you until we're 70" shit on the masses but he himself is wading through a pink ocean of prime pussoire. How 'bout you grow some balls, put your money where your mouth is and make a 46-year monogamous commitment to a woman so your song rings true, Ed? Nah, didn't think so. Well, meet me halfway and do a duet with Rolf Harris and change the lyrics to "I'll be loving you until you're 17".

Look a little deeper into this shitty chunk of audible fairy floss and as romantic as it sounds on the surface, what does "until we're 70" mean? What happens when she hits 70, Ed? Do you dump her in a dark alley like an old mattress? Life expectancy says someone who's 24 today will live until at least 100. That's 30 years she'll be alone in the prime "I can't wipe my own arse" years, and harvest is when she'll need you the most.

Ed, you're killing us average, no-talent dudes. You have no idea what it's like dealing with these hordes of broads and their unrealistic expectations of how long romantic love can last. Give me the nondescript lyrics of a Daryl Braithwaite song any day. That mother**ker was all about the romance but he didn't put a timeline on anything. Remember his song Horses? It's a classic: "We'll go riding on the horses" (and you're all "f**k yeah, Daryl, horses!") "Way up in the sky little darlin'" (and you're all "f**k yeah, Daryl, in the sky!") "And if you fall I'll pick you up" (and you're all "f**k yeah, Daryl... sadly she won't have survived the fall but now I'm single and I have two flying horses!") That's a realistic love song.

"I'll be loving you 'til we're 70" might work if two people met when they were 68, but if you keep this shit up, Ed, you puffy-haired ranga, I'll find you, I'll strip you down and I'll put you on the end of a pencil where you belong.

WHAT HAPPENS
WHEN SHE HITS
70, ED? DO YOU

THE MAN WHO TAUGHT ROBERT DOWNEY JR TO KICK ARSE

◀Eric Oram, martial arts master, reveals how he helped Iron Man & Sherlock Holmes fight like gods

You've been a fight coordinator/choreographer on the Iron Man and Sherlock Holmes films. Pardon our stupidity, but what exactly does that involve?

In addition to teaching the Chinese boxing system, we take any fight sequence for a given project, conceptualise it, take it into physical manifestation, and put it on its feet. Depending on the scene, characters, environment and budgetary constraints, we try to come up with choices that we find theatrically interesting...

Is Robert Downey Jr a quick study when it comes to fighting skills?

Well, sort of [laughs]. I've been training Robert since 2003 in Wing Chun as a private student, so when we did structure, Robert is at black-sash level. He has all the skills, now we're just trying to get the actual test done. But it's not easy because of his work schedule.

Did you add a lot of actual wing chun moves into the fight scenes for Iron Man and Sherlock?

Sherlock is more of a pure expression of the art captured on film. It's a full-contact sequence filmed in high speed. We were hitting each other; it's not a special effect. The principles and concepts of wing chun are pliable, so there's a different set of circumstances in Iron Man, but we take the rules of that universe, compare and contrast that with the fighting style, riff on strategies and apply them with Tony Stark's tech. So it's like tech with to develop a full program with them, and a retired SEAL Team Six commander became a film technical consultant ... it was very humbling and very inspirational.

Did you pick up a few fighting tips from the SEALs?

Yes, the learning never stops. When it does, I should retire! I'll take any information from any possible source, because good sense is good sense, and all roads lead to Rome. Even though the SEALs came to us to help develop their close-quarter combat, there are a lot of training methods and approaches they use to tune into and use their environment — many different aspects we don't use for survival but they do. I absorbed what I could of that. It's a different exercise

"ROBERT'S AT BLACK-SASH LEVEL IN WING CHUN. HE HAS ALL THE SKILLS"

Sherlock he had six years of experience under his belt and knew most of the movements in the wing chun system. So in that sense by the time we choreographed it he picked it up really fast, he could just pick it right up and go with it.

Is there a belt system in Wing Chun? And if so, where's Robert up to?

Sort of. My teacher [grandmaster William Cheung, who's based in Melbourne] used to say the purpose of the sash is to hold up your pants. But there is a progression of skills organised into a clear step-by-step process. So there are skills at each level or step that you take, and you're expected to be confident in them before you move on. Grading is a formality to make sure you're adept before you move on, like making a building — you need a strong and solid foundation, then you add storeys on top of that ... Relative to the grading knowledge of wing chun. We had to figure out what that would look like, so we let our imaginations go nuts.

You've also trained Navy SEALs. Are they the toughest people you've ever worked with?

Sure. Their conditioning, discipline, and mental capacity to stay locked on is very, very impressive. We had plans on how to tune into your surroundings, to what you hear, feel, see and how that relates to your objective. They take that to a whole other level.

Do you have a dream movie project you're dying to work on?

That's an interesting question... there's a character that's in the raw stages, just starting to come into focus, and it looks like it could be really interesting. It blends reality and the supernatural, so instead of a superhero it has a supernatural quality that lends itself to being more creative with fight scenes, giving you more choices out of the box, and would make for some pretty wild action sequences. It's one of Robert's upcoming projects but I can't really say any more about it!

GETTING AWAY WITH MURDER

Some of the world's worst serial killers are still walking among us...

THE HIGHWAY OF TEARS

 A billboard that screams "Killer on the loose!" and renames Canada's Route 16 "The Highway of Tears". It warns girls not to hitchhike by including photos of a serial killer's victims. Since 1969, this stretch of road, which cuts through Native American communities, has seen 18 women murdered or go missing, with some locals putting the figure much higher. A ghastly-looking American freak named Bobby Jack Fowler was suspected of many of these murders before he died of lung cancer in 2006 while in prison on other rape and kidnapping charges. But Highway of Tears killings have continued since his death.

True Detective bears striking similarities to the unsolved killings of the "Jeff Davis 8"

TRUER DETECTIVE

True Detective's first season was all sorts of awesomely creepy as Matthew McConaughey and Woody Harrelson unravelled a girl's murder in Louisiana's Vermilion Parish. Turns out the complex case wasn't far from the truth. From 2005 to 2009, the bodies of eight women were hauled from canals and swamps around the town of Jennings, population just 10,000, in nearby Jefferson Davis Parish. Known as the "Jeff Davis 8", which sounds like a bad jazz band, the victims were all young prostitutes, many of whom knew each other. Decomposition made it tough to tell much more than the fact that the girls had been murdered. In 2008, with the case stumping local cops, a multi-agency taskforce was formed to bring the serial killer to justice. But it was to no avail, other than to point to possible local police involvement in the murders because several victims claimed to have witnessed a cop shooting a drug dealer while others were supposedly going to spill the beans on cop corruption. True Detective creator Nic Pizzolatto has said he only heard about the Jeff 8 murders after writing the show. But it's kinda hard to believe because he grew up not 30 minutes from where the killings took place, a detective took an obsessive interest in solving the case, just like his TV counterpart Rust Cohle, and the name of one of the allegedly corrupt real-life cops, Donald DeLouche (pictured, above), sounds a lot like True Detective's creepy Reggie LeDoux.

THE ABC OF KILLING

On November 16, 1971, Carmen Colon (above) disappeared near Rochester in New York State. The 10-year-old's body was found two days later. Wanda Walkowicz, 11, was found dead in April 1973, and the body of Michelle Maenza, also 11, was uncovered in November of that year. A quick look at the girls' initials, plus their locations, would tell anyone the cases were connected. The cops certainly thought so, and they named them the Double Initial Killings, but this was later changed to the Alphabet Murders. No-one was ever arrested for the crimes. Fast forward to 2011 and Joseph Naso, 77, was busted for killing four women in California in the late '70s: Roxene Roggasch, Pamela Parsons, Tracy Tofoya and (a different) Carmen Colon. Case closed for all seven slayings, right? No. The police weren't sure they could tie Naso to all the murders because he typically targeted prostitutes, not very young girls, as was the case in the Rochester killings. Any chance of getting him to answer for all seven went up in smoke when his DNA didn't match evidence taken from Walkowicz's body, so the original Alphabet Murderer could still be at large. Marilyn Manson, we'd be a bit worried about that if we were you.

THE WEST MESA BONE COLLECTOR

FIn 2009, a woman walking her dog in Albuquerque, New Mexico, found what she thought might be a human bone. Investigating police then made a grisly discovery: the remains of 11 women were buried in a mass grave in the desert city's western mesa. Most of the victims of the killer dubbed the "West Mesa Bone Collector" were young Latinas who'd worked as prostitutes and disappeared between 2003 and 2005. One had been pregnant, with her unborn child's foetal remains also found. Police then freaked America right out by releasing the photos of six more women they thought were possible victims, including some pictures where the women appeared unconscious. The cops wouldn't say where the photos came from, though one woman was soon identified as having died of natural causes while two others were confirmed as alive. Six years on, police still don't have the killer. But they strongly suspect

Joseph Blea, a 58-year-old creep who was recently sentenced to 36 years in jail for the 1980s rape of a teenager. Blea will soon face three more charges, with police saying he's a monster who attacked dozens of teenage girls at knifepoint in the 1980 and 1990s. While his DNA has been linked to another murdered prostitute and there's circumstantial evidence linking him to the West Mesa burial site, Albuquerque law enforcement don't yet have enough to charge him.

BRITAIN'S POSSIBLE PUSHERS

FOver the past seven years some 60 corpses have been found floating in Manchester, UK, canals, with the deceased written off as accidents and suicides. While the gender of all victims hasn't been made public, the 27 who've been identified have been male. "It is extremely unlikely that such an alarming number of bodies found in the canals is the result of accidents or suicides," claimed Craig Jackson, professor of psychology at Birmingham City University and an expert on spree killings. "Canals are not popular suicide spots, especially for men." While the police are saying such claims are without basis and that there's nothing to link the cases, Manchester's have long feared a killer dubbed "The Pusher" is responsible. Meanwhile, cops in London are investigating claims of another Pusher, who might've thrown 18 people in front of underground tube trains during the 1970s. The claims were made in late July by former detective Geoff Platt, who said convicted killer Kiernan Kelly told him in the 1980s that he'd train-murdered 18 people. Platt claims Scotland Yard covered up the confession to avoid panic. He said he'd been sceptical of Kelly's claims until investigations showed he had been present at the scene of numerous tube "suicides". Kelly was also linked to several other murders and, in 1982, had been acquitted over an attempt to push someone in front of a train. Chillingly, his whereabouts today are unknown...

THE LONG ISLAND SERIAL KILLER

From December 2010 to April 2011, the bodies of six murdered prostitutes were discovered buried around Gilgo Beach on New York's Long Island. Each of the women had been lured via Craigslist, slaughtered and in some cases dismembered in an unknown location, then transported to the dumping ground. Four other bodies linked to the killings were also found in the area during these five months, including that of a young girl, the daughter of one of the prostitutes, and an Asian man whose remains suggested he'd been dressed in women's clothing. Police are investigating seven other murders thought linked to the killer. One victim's sister received a series of calmly mocking calls on her missing sis's phone long before the victim's remains were found. But after the case became public, the slayings stopped, prompting a criminal profiler to suggest the serial killer had moved to another part of the US to start over. "The unknown Long Island serial killer is most likely a white male in his late 30s or 40s," the profiler wrote. "He is likely married or has a girlfriend. He is well educated, technologically adept, and well spoken. He may even be charming. He is financially secure, has a reliable job, and owns a car or truck. Most of all, he is careful and meticulous. He knows how to cover his tracks. In my opinion, the Long Island Serial Killer will absolutely not stop killing until he is apprehended."

Somewhere in the US, people are living next to a mild-mannered monster.

BEER MAN

Mumbai in India is best known for its popular and colourful Bollywood films. But a few years back the city was the scene of a more sinister production whose tagline could've been "Bloodlust — matter of fact, I've got it now!" That's because from October 2006 to January 2007 seven men in South Mumbai were murdered by a maniac whose initial signature was leaving an empty beer can by their corpses. According to reports, the killer was a youngish man who drove a car and could afford to buy beer in cans, which set him apart from his poor and homeless victims. He also had sex with some of the victims and in one case left a note in English that included the phrase "Welcome to the clan". In 2008 a chap named Ravindra Kantrole was found guilty of one murder. However his conviction — and charges on two more of the killings — was thrown out in 2009 due to lack of evidence. But in 2012 Indian cops were looking at Kantrole as a suspect in the murders of three young girls. He was cleared again. At last report, the innocent fella's lawyer was shopping a movie script about his client, which in all likelihood would end up as a five-hour Bollywood musical. Meanwhile, the real Beer Man roams free.

THE VENDING MACHINE KILLER

If there's one thing Japanese love more than Godzilla, it's the country's 5.6 million vending machines. These doodads distribute everything, from soft drinks, hot chips and cold beers to used salarymen's ties, schoolgirl panties and even live lobsters. But it's remarkable that the Japanese weren't forever put off buying stuff out of machines after a psycho serial killer used them to terrorise the country back in 1985. From April through to November, vending machine drinks were laced with a poison called paraquat that's used as a herbicide. A dozen victims died agonising deaths, while another 35 fell terribly sick before recovering. In most instances the victims had inserted money and upon retrieving their purchase found a "bonus" drink awaiting them in the tray. The killings stopped as mysteriously as they began and the murderer has never been caught.

OZ'S CLAREMONT KILLER

Next Australia Day marks the 20th anniversary of the disappearance of 18-year-old Sarah Spiers, who'd been out with friends at Club Bayview, a popular venue in Claremont, a wealthy suburb of Perth. On June 9, Jane Rimmer, 23, disappeared after leaving the same club. Her body was found in bushland south of Perth a month later. On March 14, 1997, 27-year-old Ciara Glennon went missing after a night out with friends in Claremont, with her remains discovered in bushland a few weeks later. All three had reportedly either called or tried to hail taxis before they vanished. Police were convinced they were hunting a serial killer, with a taskforce targeting the state's licensed cabbies, all of whom were extensively investigated, DNA-tested and subsequently cleared of involvement. Other suspects included a police officer, a mayor and a civil libertarian, all of whom deny they had anything to do with any of the crimes. Police also went so far as to look at Bradley John Murdoch, who was later convicted of the headline-making outback murder of British tourist Peter Falconio, but he was in prison at the time of the Claremont murders. Similarly, Brit Mark Dixie, in Australia at the time and later found guilty of the UK slaying of model Sally Anne Bowman, was cleared. In a Silence of the Lambs-type move, police even sought the help of convicted serial killer David Birnie in trying to "get inside the head" of the Claremont monster. But unfortunately, it was to no avail. The Claremont case remains Australia's most chilling unsolved serial murder. Got any information that could help bring the person or persons responsible to justice? Call Crimestoppers on 1800 333 000.

The monster who killed Sarah Spiers Jane Rimmer and Ciara Glennon is still out there

GETTING AWAY WITH MURDER

THE SMILEY FACE MURDERS

F The Smiley Face Murder theory was put forward by two retired New York detectives in 2008. They reckoned that in the past two decades, across 11 states in the US, as many as 45 white males — all of who were young, popular and athletic — fell victim to a serial killer who made their murders look like accidents. After the men were murdered in unknown locations, with the bodies possibly stashed for days or months, they were dumped into rivers to make it look like they'd drowned, with the water washing away vital evidence. The detectives traced river-flow patterns to determine where the bodies entered the water. In each case, they found a smiley face painted on a wall or tree. When they discovered such graffiti in Iowa, they would've been forgiven for shitting their pants because the smiley face had devil horns and was accompanied with a note that read "Evil Happy Smiley Face Man".

But it gets even freakier: with some victims disappearing on the same day in different states, the cops concluded there must be multiple killers at work. At least two were later reclassified as homicides, after ligature marks and other evidence pointed to them being dead before they hit the water. While many law enforcement officials are skeptical about the Smiley Face Killer theory, others have come to believe.

SYDNEY'S GAY MURDERS

F There's a group of serial killers and accomplices who're now in their 40s and maintaining strict silence about the horrific crimes they committed as youths. That's because up to 80 gay men were murdered in the 1980s and 1990s, some by organised groups, with many of the killers going free because of anti-homosexual police prejudice tainting the initial investigations. While some groups of killers, such as "The Alexandria Eight" and "Tamarama Three", were convicted of murders and sentenced to jail, at least 30 slayings remain unsolved. Many of these killings took place along eastern suburbs coastline, with men robbed, bashed and thrown off cliffs.

Bodies found on rocks below were usually written off as suicides or accidents by police, despite evidence to the contrary and a growing belief gay men were being targeted. One victim who managed to escape a bashing attack in Bondi carried out by a gang of up to 18 youths, heard the leader saying, "Let's throw him off where we threw the other one off." Despite recent extensive investigations, police have been unable to gather enough evidence to charge the suspected killers. Earlier this year, a $100,000 reward was announced for info leading to convictions in three of the highest-profile unsolved cases. Know more? Call Crimestoppers on 1800 333 000.

HWASEONG: KOREA'S MASS KILLER

F At some chilling point in South Korea's future a maniac might walk into a police station and, like Kevin Spacey in Se7en, say something along the lines of, "Hey, I believe you've been after me for raping and murdering all those women in Hwaseoing — but what're you gonna do about it?" But even with a full confession cops and prosecutors couldn't do so much as arrest him because South Korea has a 15-year statute of limitations on murder and the country's most infamous serial killings took place between 1986 and 1991. Over those five years, an unknown suspect preyed on 10 women aged from 13 to 71, strangling them with their own clothes and sexually assaulting them. Despite extensive investigations, which included speaking to 21,280 suspects and witnesses and fingerprinting nearly twice that many people, the killer has never been found. Based on the testimony of the one victim who escaped, the perp was a slender man of medium height who was then in his twenties — which makes it likely he's still out there posing as a respectable middle-aged Korean citizen.

I work in the mines. I used to be on a shovel for about 10 hours a day, I've operated a dozer, and now I work in pipe testing and pneumatic testing. I'm coming up to five years in the job. My dad was in the mines, so he got me the start.

Plus you obviously kick arse at modelling. How do the two of those gigs go together?

[Laughs] I had to change my name on Facebook so people from work couldn't look me up. I did a shoot for the paper up in Gladstone, and a few people brought the paper to work and wanted me to sign it. Super embarrassing!

But that won't be a problem when this issue of the magazine comes out, will it?

[Laughs] ZOO's actually in just about every shed on site. It'll be really interesting — I'll get to work and there'll be pictures of me posted to my computer.

What about when you're not doing your bit to keep China supplied with Aussie minerals?

Do you get to socialise much?

Sometimes. I work 13 days on, one day off, so it's a difficult roster. The only place that's open in Gladstone on a Sunday after work is a strip club. I've been there often...

Have they ever offered you a job when you go there?

[Laughs] Yes, they have! And it doesn't go down well. It's not my favourite thing to be asked on a Sunday.

Are you single?

I am single, by choice. My job doesn't leave me much time to find anyone to date, and dating men from work is a no-no. My dad always said you don't shit where you eat.

Wise words. What do you go for in a guy?

It doesn't really matter to me what they do for work. Someone who's smart is nice, a bit funny, and a good body doesn't hurt.

A ROOKIE'S GUIDE TO UNDERSTANDING THE NFL

→ American football is a lot like a game of chess, except the pieces are extremely big, fast and powerful blokes. It's just as complex as chess, too, with enough complex terminology to fill several phone books. Here's a quick guide to terms you're likely to hear while watching a match...

PLAYING MAN COVERAGE

Basically, when the offence is passing instead of running the ball, this is when defenders have responsibility for a certain player and are meant to stick to him like glue.

PLAYING ZONE

Instead of responsibility for one man, defenders are responsible for a certain area of the field. You'll hear this mentioned a lot during televised games, as the NFL

THREE KINDS OF SAFETIES

Every defence has a free safety and a strong safety. When the defence lines up before the play starts, they're usually the guys positioned deepest down the field. They're the last line of defence, with the free being lighter and faster, and the strong being bigger and better at helping stop the run. Just to make things complicated, teams can score a safety, which is worth two points, usually by tackling the ball carrier in his own end zone (the equivalent of the in-goal in rugby league).

is a pass-happy league nowadays and many teams rely on the zone concept.

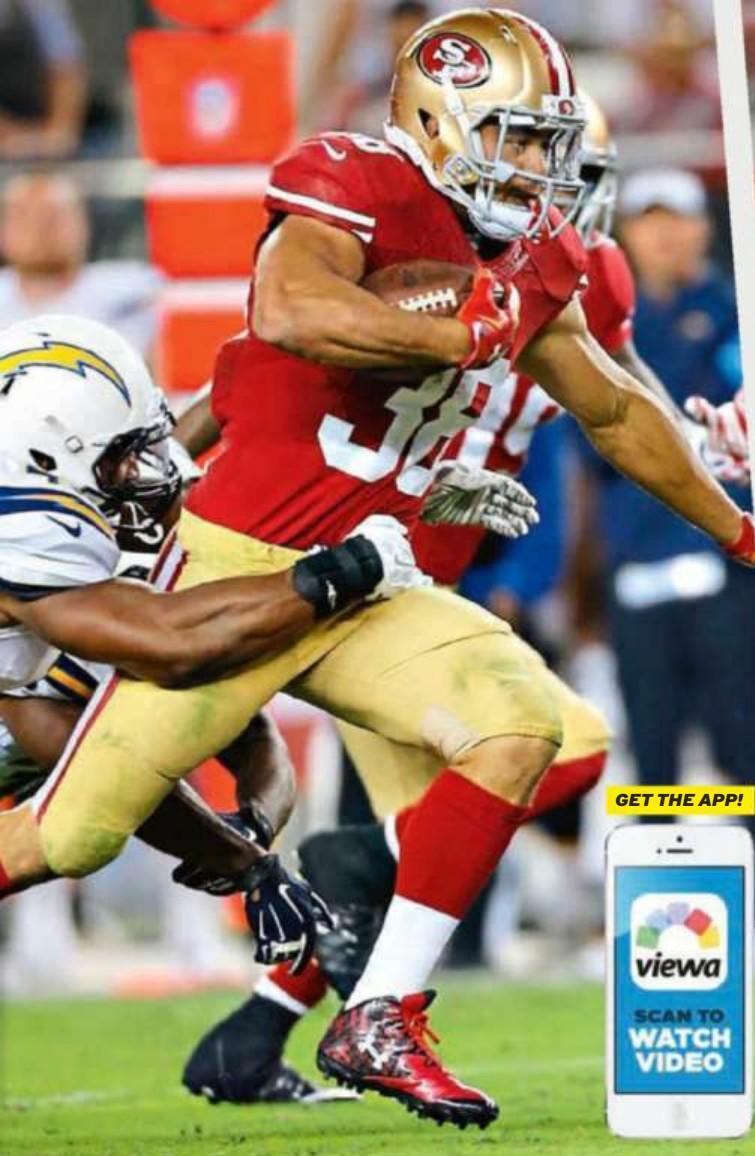

If watching the Hayne Plane is your first taste of gridiron, you need to read this...

IT'S FOOTY, BUT NOT AS WE KNOW IT

BLITZ

This happens when the defence tries to get to the quarterback by taking a risk and sending extra defenders after him. The idea is to overload the guys who are blocking for (that is, protecting) the QB, or to send a defender in from an unexpected position. If it doesn't work, the defence is vulnerable because blitzing means they often can't cover all the guys who are looking to catch the ball.

COVER 2

If you hear a commentator say, “[Insert team name here] are in cover 2” — and you definitely will — he’s referring to a popular defensive scheme in which the safeties cover the deepest part of the field, taking half of that area each. It’s been popular since the 1970s and still gets used a lot.

UNNECESSARY ROUGHNESS

Yep, despite being one of the most violent sports on Earth, this is a penalty in the NFL. It can be called for a wide range of things, like hitting a player’s head, neck or face with your helmet, smashing defenceless players, and grabbing a player’s helmet and trying to pull his head off.

TWO-MINUTE WARNING

Play is stopped for this near the end of each half. For the final two minutes, the clock is stopped whenever the offence’s pass catcher or runner takes the ball out of bounds. If a team’s trying to make a comeback, taking the ball out like this is a must.

DELAY OF GAME

This penalty is called when the offence doesn’t get the ball into play within the time limit. That’s set by the play clock, which gives the team 25 seconds to start the action after the refs declare the ball is ready to be played. If a team’s trying to protect a lead late in the game, they’ll run the play clock right down.

HARD COUNT

The count is what the quarterback yells to his team just before the ball is snapped: “34! 34! 28! Hut! Hut!” QBs use a hard count to try to get the defence penalised for jumping offside — that is, move before the ball is snapped — by yelling the words in such a way that the defence is fooled.

DEFENDERS IN THE BOX

The line of scrimmage is where the biggest guys on O and D line up right across from each other, and the box is the area immediately surrounding this. When a commentator says the defence is “crowding the box”, they’re moving up in order to try to stop the run.

OVERLOAD BLITZ

A blitz that focuses on one side of the offence, or one particular bit of the offensive line (the big guys who put their hands on the ground before the ball is snapped).

who then throws it downfield. There’s also the reverse, in which players run parallel to the line of scrimmage in opposite directions, handing it off to each other before one sprints downfield.

PLAY ACTION PASS

If a team runs the ball well early, the QB will pretend to hand it off to a runner so the defence concentrates on him, then keep the ball and find a receiver downfield.

PANCAKE BLOCK

A spectacular block by an offensive player, usually a very large one, that puts a defender on his back. Basically, running him over so he’s flat as a pancake.

GADGET PLAY

A trick play that uses deception and unusual ball movement to fool the defence. A good example is a flea flicker, when the ball is snapped to the QB, who then moves it to another player more PG than that! That's definitely a late-night version. What about adding some realism by saying, "He's binned it into a kangaroo!" or, "A car's been turned over by the fans and set on fire at McPhillamy Park?" It doesn't get much more Bathurst than that...

[Laughs] I think the game's

NEW V8 GAME CARS!

[Laughs] We didn't do any of that — we didn't even put Skippy in the game! Sorry, we didn't think of that.

You've been with Forza for a fair while. Have you had any input into other stuff, like the realism of the tracks, the feel of the cars, or test-driving before the game is officially released?

Absolutely. I've been involved with Xbox since the Aussie launch, and I've said the whole time that when you play the game with a normal controller it's a digital skill, but the reality of driving is it's more analog. It's those aspects we've spoken about a lot over the years in order to develop the console, get the most realistic interpretation of how you drive the cars, and up the authenticity of the game, especially with the tracks. I've been blown away by the level of effort to digitise the place [Bathurst] accurately — it's incredible. The wild card drivers in 2013, they learnt the track by playing Forza. They were able to experience the metal grate at the bottom of Reid Park, the camber change at Hell Corner, the drop into The Dipper... seriously, the stuff the wild card drivers saw and were able to associate with totally helped their run into that race. I've done lap after lap after lap ... we did a lot of work on it before the game was released in Australia.

Are you much of a gamer?

I do play, but my young bloke who's 20 smashes me, and my nine-year-old daughter is very proud when she beats Dad!

Gamers can now drive V8 Supercars on famous tracks like Le Mans, Brands Hatch, the Nürburgring... if you could drive a V8 Supercar on any circuit, which one would you pick?

I actually raced at Le Mans with Jaguar in 1997; did a car comparison with an HSV GTS, an AMG and a BMW

"The game is PG so they couldn't include what I yelled at Russell Ingall..."

M-series at the Nürburgring — that's a full lap on the big circuit — I've raced at Macau; Fuji in Japan; tested at Spa [Belgium]. But to put Bathurst into context, Peter Brock said it's the best track on the planet, although he was slightly biased after winning nine times! But having driven on some of the great tracks, that's where it sits. Everyone who drives it, raves about it, especially the European drivers. A great track has to have character, elevation changes, an unforgiving nature — they're the key things that make Bathurst special. Some of the famous American drivers have driven Bathurst and raved about it. It's not bad for a public road that's 6.2km long.

Have you got any advice for gamers who are going to give Mt Panorama a crack for the first time in Forza 6?

[Laughs] The first thing is to go really steady to begin with. The track freaks everyone out the first time. It's unbelievable, the elevation change and how little room for error there is — you go just a little bit wide and you're into the fence. But that's what makes it great.

You're famous for the shedload of success you had with Holden. Do you ever want to drive a Ford in the game and win Bathurst in a Falcon just for giggles?

[Laughs] No way! No way! That's a big no!

ENTOURAGE

[MA15+]

1/10

THE GIST: Vince (Adrian Grenier) is making his directorial debut on a film that's already over budget, which makes Ari Gold (Jeremy Piven) crack the shits because he's financing it with help from a rich Texan father (Billy Bob Thornton) and his meddling son (Haley Joel Osment). Turtle (Jerry Ferrara) is trying to date Ronda Rousey, E's (Kevin Connolly) ex-girlfriend is preggers and Drama (Kevin Dillon) has sex-tape troubles. ZOO SAYS: It ticks all the boxes: heaps of hot chicks, cool cameos, hip music and plenty of screen time for Ari to steal the show. But at the end of the day, it works better as a short TV show, and this feels a tad long.

SUPERHERO

AVENGERS: AGE OF ULTRON

[M]

THE GIST: Tony Stark (Robert Downey Jr) fiddles with a formerly dormant, unexpectedly sentient A.I. program, Ultron. Shit goes south when it decides humans are the enemy and sets out to make them extinct. The Avengers must reunite to stop the rogue robot.

ZOO SAYS: Not quite as killer as the original, it still has plenty of epic action set-pieces like the destructive biffo between Hulk and Iron Man. There's some lame jokes, romance and over-stuffing of characters, but overall it's a fun ride. The end scene will leave you hanging for the third flick!

FILM

ADVENTURE/
DRAMA

EVEREST

[M]

8/10

THE GIST: Based on the tragic true story of a 1996 Everest expedition, this disaster flick follows two rival tour guides — Rob (Jason Clarke) and Scott (Jake Gyllenhaal) — as they attempt to take a tour group to the top of the world's tallest mountain. An unforeseen storm turns a thrill-seeking adventure into a fight for life for the group.

ZOO SAYS: Presented in 3D for IMAX, the vertigo-inducing shots will test your sphincter's fortitude. The all-star cast, including Josh Brolin, Sam Worthington and Keira Knightley, are impressive. It gets a bit chaotic and hard to tell who's who in the blizzards, though.

RACING

FORZA MOTORSPORT 6

XBO

9/10

THE GIST: The game that lets you take a dream vehicle and floor it around bends like you just don't care is back, better than ever. Much like before, you choose cars from one of five different classes: Super Street, Sport Icons, Grand Touring, Pro Racing or Ultimate Motorsport, then hit real-world tracks for adrenaline-pumping races. Driving earns you XP points, which are used to improve your driver level and install mods that give you speed boosts.

ZOO SAYS: Whether you drive like Mark Skaife or his grandma, changing the Driver Assists shifts the gameplay style from authentic to arcade (or somewhere in-between) to fit everyone. It feels super lifelike with slick detail and accurate interiors, and gameplay that's hard but fair. Best of all, the new V8 Supercars selection rocks.

SPORT

PES 2016

PS4, XBO, PS3, XB360, PC

7/10

DESIGN

SUPER MARIO MAKER

8/10

THE GIST: The latest annual game kicks off the soccer season with a number of key leagues, namely UEFA Champions, Europa and Super Cup. This worthy alternative to FIFA has taken last season's gameplay and shoed-in loads of additional cool bits, like better cutscenes and TV presentation. Master League mode, which lets you build a team of the world's best, has also scored some presentation goals.

ZOO SAYS: Players seem to run around, slide and fall over more fluidly than before (though true realism would require more diving). It doesn't have some of the league licences we really want, but at least we can design our own kits and players to take the edge off.

THE GIST: Nintendo gives us the permission and tools to undo and alter its classic Mario games, with this level-design editor for sharing and playing with the online world. Using the Wii U gamepad and pen, you can redesign classic platform levels we remember, or create a new level from a blank canvas, then try running Mario through them.

ZOO SAYS: It's easier than unclogging a toilet, and more fun. Simply place all the bricks, coins, mushrooms, Goombas, pipes and turtle shells wherever you like, and warp your childhood memories. Like shacking up with your mate's hot ex, changing Mario games like this seems so wrong, yet so right.

DRUM &amp; BASS

RUDIMENTAL
WE THE GENERATION

SOUNDS LIKE: After the crazy success of their debut, this British drum-and-bass band have a hard act to follow with their sophomore release. Wisely, they stick to the same format and have once again collaborated with a mix of mainstream (Ed Sheeran, Dizzee Rascal), well-respected (Foy Vance, Lianne La Havas) and upcoming (Will Heard, Mahalia) talent. While MNEK returns, John Newman's vocals are sorely missed this time around. The lads throw a D&B beat under an impressive mix of styles (including a soulful Bobby Womack sample — if you buy the deluxe edition with a whopping 18 tracks).

ZOO SAYS: Boasts a bunch of big hits, including Never Let You Go featuring the underrated awesomeness of Foy Vance, but misses a smash like Feel the Love.

INDIE ROCK

METRIC
PAGANS IN PARIS

6/10

SOUNDS LIKE: The Canadian hit-making machine is back with more sugary synths, girly vocals and smatterings of live instruments. There's touches of Garbage, Sneaker Pimps and even Underworld on Celebrate. Darker tracks like Fortunes work well, and there are plenty of songs like The Shade ripe for radio. Too Bad, So Sad is way too poppy and lame for us, though. ZOO SAYS: Destined for success. Like a flasher's shrivelled schlong, expect to be exposed to this whether you like it or not.

ALT METAL

10 YEARS
FROM BIRTH TO BURIAL

SOUNDS LIKE: Touring Oz with Dead Letter Circus in October, this US five-piece sound a lot like A Perfect Circle mixed with Deftones — particularly on the blatant Triggers & Tripwires. ZOO SAYS: A second-tier act with some cool riffs, atmosphere and a vocalist with an obvious hard-on for Tool's Maynard James Keenan.

7/10

TESSERACT
POLARIS

7/10

SOUNDS LIKE: One of the biggest names in the progressive djent metal scene, the UK's TesseracT have reunited with singer Dan Tompkins for their third album. They continue to navigate Meshuggah-style riffs, adding heavy atmosphere and soaring singing.

ZOO SAYS: Technically impressive, though lacking memorable songs at times.

HEAVY ROCK

GAY PARIS
THE DARK ARTS

SOUNDS LIKE: One of the most underrated bands in Oz, these Sydney lads mix swamp rock, blues and metal. Ginger-bearded singer Wailin H Monks's throaty vocals and imaginative lyrics call to mind Clutch and Fair To Midland. ZOO SAYS: Original, deranged and deadset awesome, these hirsute hillbillies rock like a motherf**ker.

PRESIDENT WEST

Mr Kim K's said he's running for US president in 2020. Here are some other odd candidates...

1 Kanye West obviously got stoned before his acceptance speech at the VMAs and said, "It's about new ideas, bro, new ideas," then declared he'll run in 2020 to be the President of the USA

2 The man who wants to put the pot back into POTUS has more platinum albums (seven) and Grammys (21) than any other candidate. Given Donald Trump started off as a joke and could possibly win, it's time to prepare for First Lady Kim Kardashian

3 Trump's already reacted, saying Obama's been so bad "you won't see another black candidate for generations"

4 There are hundreds of other 2016 candidates, including the Free Pony Party's Vermin Supreme (pledges: zombie energy, time travel research and, yes, free ponies)

5 Henry Krajewski ran for the Poor Man's Party in 1952, 1956 and 1960 — he campaigned with a pig under his arm, and for "more beer parties for the poor man"

6 Leonard Jones, of the High Moral Party, stood often in the mid-1800s. He believed he was immortal through a regime of prayer and fasting, but died of pneumonia in 1868

7 God-bother Homer Tomlinson planned to appoint a Secretary of Righteousness if he'd won for the Theocratic Party in the mid-1900s. Sounds like a job for old Yeezy...

ZOO confessions!

The girls of ZOO Singles leave their inhibitions at the computer screen and reveal all about their raunchy online dating experiences...

CARLY, 26

"I broke up with my long-term fella and realised I wanted something different: just fun... just sex! After signing up to ZOO Singles I had access to hundreds of guys minutes from where I live. At first I was quite shy, but after a few days I'd had amazing sex! With a new guy to please whenever I feel like it, I've never felt so satisfied!"

DESIREE, 43

"I find men my age cannot keep up with my highly active sex drive, so I prefer the effort put in by a horny 20-something. One guy wanted me so badly he would contact me in the middle of the night to meet up! It turned me on so much knowing how badly he wanted sex. I guess there's a certain appeal to a woman with experience in the bedroom."

TARA, 21

"I work nights in a hotel and my sex life suffers, so I signed up to ZOO Singles. I wanted one guy right away so I suggested he pay me a visit at work. I checked him into a room and after a few minutes I got a very sexy room service request. With customer service a priority, I put a 'Do Not Disturb' sign on the door, and then he began to rip off my clothes!"
